Myrtle Beach, S.C. reminds travelers that it has 60 miles of coastline by celebrating 60 extra days of summer each year in September and October. This year, the 60 More Days of Summer campaign showcases the beach destination's cuisine by piecing together a bucket list of sorts composed of standout dishes and drinks.

"As we share all the reasons to visit during the fall season — the weather, the warm waters, the affordability, and of course, the beaches — we wanted to add one more reason to the list: the impressive and perhaps surprisingly diverse culinary scene," says Scott Schult, executive vice president of marketing for Visit Myrtle Beach, in a release.

The visitors bureau highlights destination dining at 60 area restaurants for the ultimate tasting tour this fall. Plus, Myrtle Beach offers adventurous angles for discovering a taste of place, from crabbing to kayak fishing and cooking your catch.
